Historic:

"Roland" is the name of the short-range mobile-air missile system (mounted here by Model Miniature on a French AMX-30 chassis.) This system is of Franco-German construction and enters service in the French Army at the end from the 1970s.

The Roland AMX-30 has been designed to meet French and German requirements for a low-level mobile missile system designed to protect mobile terrain formations and high-value fixed targets.

It includes a rectangular superstructure on which is positioned the radar system incorporating two launch tubes on each side. Its automatic loading system is powered by a stock of eight missiles stored inside the superstructure. The Roland has a range of 16 km and it takes 3 crew to handle it.

This anti-aircraft tank has been put into service in different countries such as IRAQ, Qatar, Nigeria, and Spain.

The Roland system can be mounted on different chassis like the AMX-30, Marder or Lkw 15 t MAN. The system has also been used by Germany, Venezuela, Argentina, Brazil, and by the US military as one of the very few SAM systems purchased abroad.
